Argentina produces a number of quality wines, however it's most famous for _____. It is a deeply pigmented grape with _____ skins but doesn't have a lot of bitter tannin or a lot of acid.

It's concentrated and has a lot of _____, like blackberry, blueberries, and sees oak. You'll also see notes of black pepper and violet flowers wrapped in vanilla.

Chileans thought they were making Merlot, but it turns out they were growing _____ . It's like merlot with plush red fruit, medium tannin, and medium body, but it has green, herbaceous aspects.

_____ is the most planted grape in Chile, and you'll see plenty of it at your local wine shop or grocery store.
